

HOME / NEWS / DESIGN /

Barracuda Yacht Design reveals 42m sailing yacht design for Pendennis at the MYS

on September 29, 2014 3:46 pm

Barracuda Yacht Design has unveiled its new design for a 42m Pendennis sailing yacht at the Monaco Yacht Show. She is a beautiful water-ballasted ketch, inspired by the grace and stature of large yachts from the first half of the 20th century.

Capturing the romance of the period, the 42m sailing yacht dispenses with excess baroque, in favour of painted surfaces, natural teak and sharp, modern details.

With a gently rising sheer line and pronounced overhang at the stern, the challenge was to combine classic external appeal with modern technology that included a comfortable and spacious interior.

Beneath the waterline, soft, flat lines for efficiency and a wide transom for good stability will ensure a fast and compliant ride. The water-ballasted hull with lifting centreboard will convey guests in speed and comfort at relatively low angles of heel.

The sail plan comprises a fully battened main and mizzen, with a self-tacking jib and overlapping Genoa, with downwind options for a Code-0 or furling Gennaker flown from the bowsprit.

A large, full-beam width Owner's suite with twin bathrooms, plus symmetrical guest accommodation for 8 people via 2 double and 2 twin cabins is fairly unusual for classic yacht concept such as this. All rooms benefit from large hull windows and luxurious appointments.

Dedicated living spaces include an enclosed deck saloon with 360° views and an external central lounge protected by a permanently fixed bimini.